There were buyers and online sellers until there was an internet, but the increase in e-business in general began in the late 20th century, with eBay's exponential growth. Instead of being a complicated process meant only for computer experts, the management of a company on eBay offering normal people the possibility of creating one's own company with a very little initial investment. Since the first example of e-commerce has brought the idea of online shopping to masses, e-businesses have grown every year, with the types of companies available limited only by the imagination of their creators. Online business is so popular that many brick companies and Malta need to create their own virtual departments. Large-scale retailers such as Wal-Mart, high-end marketing as enjoyva and specialized retailers also as Tea Stash all have their own online presence. Virtual stores are also important additions to the local economy, with over 25% of all small businesses that have a sales website. If the Internet is one thing, it's large. There is room for everything you invent anyone and want to put online. The infinite amount of space available in combination with the relatively low cost of creating an e-commerce site perfect for the types of e-business that turn to a relatively small quantity of people. Do you want to create a store that sells only Halloween costumes for dogs? It is likely that you ever realize the opening of this store locally, but the inaccurate number of online buyers guarantees enough people interested in making this business feasible. This is just as true for hair arcs, the accessories of the cupcake or chainmaille supplies processing. If you are interested in it, the odds are that enough other people are also interested, and that can make a profitable business. It was said that the American economy has gone from a production base for a service sector. If this is true or not, service companies are doing online fortunes in every aspect of life. Uber and Lyft offer their taxi version in the city of the whole country. Shipt and other companies make your spegnery shopping for you and deliver food to your door. Millions of hungry, busy people take advantage of dozens of predefined box meals can order at home, and whoever wants to a personalized touch in their lives are ordered by hundreds of different monthly services box of registration, from rosy romance to international candies. Convenience is the common thread of all these e-business, with experienced entrepreneurs who offer to do small tasks that others do not feel they have time to do themselves. Building on the mentality of the old-time handyman, the online service business is really great business. Perhaps the most iconic of electronic companies are those who sell anything to everyone "at least, nothing you can put your hands. Those who play online games, from World of Warcraft to the Sims, have familiarized with experts who sell virtual goods to make Looking for their virtual characters and act better. Virtual designers can perform a full-time income by creating products for popular games. Some of the most profitable virtual vendors are those that provide services to others who are trying to create their own e-business. Designer Websites, SEO Specialists, Dropship Company and Branding Professionals All offer services to be entrepreneurs who prefer to pay someone else than spending thousands of hours needed to become an expert on all these aspects of management of an online business. The owners of most successful e-business companies know that it is cheaper to hire an expert that s precious time An ability does not have. Free inventive professionals are taking advantage of this and transforming the concert economy into a full-time business. E-business has a vast range impact on the way in which organizations lead business. It has internal processes and automated and simplified communications, offering improvements in productivity and efficiency. In the supply chain, e-business has an increase in the levels of Reduced transaction costs and improvement of the reactivity to be modified. The e-business has transformed retail, with the increasing preference for online shopping and availability of digital delivery of a wide range of products and services. In some sectors, such as finance, new forms of competition have emerged from organizations that adopt e-business techniques. The European Commission reported in A ç à, - A "ICT and impact studies on e-business - 2009" that e-business components were now an essential business element. Many organizations have taken the strategic decision to integrate E-business solutions in production processes, quality management, marketing, logistics and customer services. In fact, 97% of respondents told the study reported that their new processes are supported by information and communication technologies. The productivity gains are an important advantage of e-business. An UK office report for national statistics found that organizations with automatic connections between the key business process and their e-commerce activities have greater productivity of medium labor than companies without connections. Productivity gains derive from e-business investments in processes, such as workflow, access to STU Data minds and communication. The e-business has had a significant impact on the efficiency of supply chain operations. Transaction data exchange partners, schedules, requests and market information on secure networks. The ability to share information on market changes ensures that the entire supply chain can respond effectively, reducing the risk and eliminating waste. A study by Ruhr-UniversitÄt Bochum - "The impact of e-business on the organization of the German automotive supply sector" - found that e-business has helped reduce transaction costs and improve L Efficiency of the most critical procurement chain activity - exchange of information and workflow. The figures of the U.S. Office. Census Bureau highlight the importance of e-commerce, particularly in the business-to-business sector, which represented 92% of e-commerce activity. The e-commerce report has shown that in 2008, e-commerce has grown more quickly than the total economic activity in three of the four sectors covered by the report on the electronic statistics of the Bureau office. Sales of e-commerce retailers increased by 3.3% with a volume of $ 142 billion. Many organizations have used e-business processes to transform customer service delivery. The structures, such as ordering online, the technical support of the self-service and the community forums, have a better quality of the service and reduced costs. Organizations in many sectors deal with new forms of competition by companies that use e-business processes to offer customers a low-cost high quality service than established companies. In the financial sector, for example, a study by Bruce Perrott of the University of Technology, Sydney, Australia, discovered that e-business was transforming the structure of the banking industry with the emergence of non-traditional competitors, such as retailers or other financial institutions.
