The great sales point behind movie download is convenience. You don't need to enter a car, stay online or spend several days waiting as your DVDs travel back and forth between your home and a shipping center. But choose a service that does not satisfy your needs can make the process pale compared to other purchase and rental methods. The first thing to keep in mind is the platform that the site requires. Most movie sites require Windows XP. Some will also work with Windows Vista or Windows 2000. Only the iTunes Music Store supports the Macintosh operating system, and none of the main sites currently supports Linux. Most sites also require Internet Explorer and Windows Media Player. Even if you can view most sites in Firefox, the Movielink site will only work with Internet Explorer with ActiveX control enabled. Amazon Unbox requires Microsoft. Net framework, and Vongo requires a proprietary application. For many users, the next great deal-breaker is the selection of the site. Download sites get their films from film studios, who own digital rights for films. A site cannot offer the film without first negotiating an agreement with the studio. Some sites, like Movielink, have agreements with many main studios, so they have a wide selection of mainstream movies. Others, such as Guba, have a selection of free, independent movies, as well as the study outputs that you can rent for a fee. Vongo is the property of Starz Entertainment, and its selection only reflects what Starz has the right to transmit. When you find a site with a selection of movies you like, the next thing to watch is the quality of the films. There are a couple of measures to keep in mind. One is the resolution, which is measured in pixels. The greater the resolution, the best quality is the image. For example, movies in the video Download Wal-Mart Store have a resolution of 640 x 480 pixels, which is the same as the lowest standard television resolution. Wal-Mart also offers a scaled version for portable multimedia players with a resolution of 320 x 240 pixels. You can also measure the quality in bitrate, often measured in bits per second (bps). Higher is the bitrate, the better the quality. A bitrate DVD is about 5 kb per second (kbps), or 5000 bps. The codec, or the program that encodes and decodes the digital video, can also significantly affect the quality of the video. However, sites do not always specify which codec use. Finally, before buying or renting movies online, you should read the terms of use of the site and become familiar with your DRM. Some sites are relatively flexible. You can play movies on multiple machines, download them to portable multimedia players and also burn them to DVD. Other sites offer a lot less options - For example, Amazon Unbox received criticism shortly after its launch for the perceived inflexibility of its terms of use. Several sites allow you to make a backup disk that will be played only on the computer originally used for the file. For sites that use streaming media, you never have a copy of the movie, just watch it as it flows. Once you've found a site that meets your criteria for platform, selection, quality and terms of use, a few simple questions can help you make your final choice: How much do movies cost? Are they almost expensive as DVDs? If so, would you rather find a cheaper alternative or stay with high quality DVDs? Do the rental and purchase options match what you are looking for? If the site offers a subscription program, do you have enough movies that interest you to make it useful? Are the movies compatible with any portable device you want to use to watch them? Several sites guarantee that their files will play on any Microsoft PlaysForSure compatible device, but others have more limited compatibility. Does the site use a file format with which you have had good or bad experiences in the past? Need a proprietary download manager or a player? If so, do you mind downloading and learning how to use them, or would you rather use programs you are already familiar with? The player has all the features you want - can you pause, back and fast forward? To see a comparison of some site offerings, check out these articles from TechCrunch and ExtremeTech. Next, we'll take a look at the movie download services that are available now. By Steve Lander | Thinkstock Images/Comstock/Getty Images iTunes is more than just a media management application. It is also a gateway to one of the largest media stores in the world -- the iTunes Media Store. When you download a movie through iTunes, Apple sends the file to your computer. The iTunes program determines where it is saved based on the configuration. By default, iTunes creates an iTunes Media folder within an iTunes folder in the main music folder. Unless you have changed the location where Windows saves files, both Windows 8 and 7 use the directory "C:\Users\Username\My Music\iTunes\iTunes Media." To find your exact location, browse this directory, replacing "Username" with the name you use to access your computer. Every file that iTunes downloads is sent to the iTunes Media folder. On the Mac, iTunes works the same way. It also creates an iTunes Media subfolder for all your downloads. Unlike Windows, it uses a different directory scheme. To find your files on a Mac, see Users/Username/Music/iTunes/iTunes Media. Replace "Username" with your actual username. If you don't like your current storage path, you have two options. One is to gather the downloaded movie file and move it by yourself by cutting and pasting it into a new drive or directory. When The file in iTunes, the program will ask you to tell you where the new file is. The other option is to have iTunes move its entire iTunes directory to a different location. You can do it via the iTunes preferences tool. By default, iTunes stores its downloaded files up Main computer hard drive. If you have a lot of iTunes downloads and other material stored on your hard drive, you may run out of space quickly. Move your iTunes files, whether you do it one by one or another, saves space on the main hard drive. This also means that you will have space to download more movies. By Liz Jacobs I downloaded michanolimit image from Fotolia.com Mozilla Firefox is a web browser similar to Internet Explorer or Google Chrome. The browser is part of the Mozilla Application Suite. Firefox makes downloading simple movies because once downloaded, a window opens that allows you to immediately access the download. Downloading a movie in Firefox is very similar to downloading a video in any other browser. However, the download window looks different, because Firefox has its own unique browser interface. Go to a site like Netflix, Movie Download, #1 Downloads of online movies, Joost or Hulu. (See Resources and References). Subscribe to the website. Some sites offer a 30-day free trial. Some sites listed are completely free of charge. Select the category «Films.» Click on the cinematic genre you want to see, such as comedy, drama or horror. Click on the movie that interests you.
